JOSEPH BARONDESS—A CHILD OF THE TRANSITION ERA

I.

Jewish observers have often sought to visualize a complete picture of American Jewish life. There is the natural tendency to reduce the complex and contradictory to a simple harmony. And when such a unifying process is achieved in the form of comprehensive concepts there also arises the urge to characterize the unity in the symbolism of artistic imagery. Attempts have been made from time to time by Jewish thinkers and writers to discern the fundamental significance underlying the fantastic medley of phenomena in American Jewish life: to subject the divergent tendencies to the discipline of logical formulation. And there have not been wanting artists and poets who endeavoured to illuminate the surface with flashes of their genius and discover lines of a harmonized contour.

These efforts have for the most part ended in failure. It is as yet impossible to speak of a typical American Jewish life, or American Jewish entity. Jewish existence on this continent has not passed its gestatory or formative stage. It may offer faint hints of the purport of its development. It has not achieved a definite character capable of description. It has not produced any of the stigmata of a distinctive group life.

There are several million Jews in America. A great deal of communal activity is going on among them. There are needs and problems which indicate spiritual restlessness and intellectual aliveness. Can we pick out any of these social activities, and find in them the marks of a peculiarly Americo-Jewish character? We have cultural activities. Is there discernible on them the imprint of a characteristically American Jewish mind or temperament? There is Zionism. What has America contributed to Zionist ideology? At Zionist Congresses it has been amusing to hear New York Jews speak in Lithuanian English of their "American point of view." There is the sphere of Jewish religion. Has America contributed anything to Jewish religious thought? The Reform Temple preens itself on its modernism. But its modernism is really the modernism of German Jewish Reform but scantily modified. Shall we look at the world of Jewish education? The most effective work done in this field is still the service rendered by the archaic Talmud Torah maintained by immigrant orthodox Jews. The Sunday Schools, if they are to be regarded as the American answer to the question of Jewish education, are indeed a very meager achievement. The realm of philanthropy is considered to be the province of the non-immigrant Jew. But here, too, it must be borne in mind that the chief inspiration has been furnished by the coterie of Germanic Jews. These Jews too, though differing in many respects from the bulk of the immigrant masses are, nevertheless, immigrants, or sons of immigrants, and by no means typify the putative character of the American Jew.

It is illustrative of our thesis to point out that indigenous American Jewry has not produced any literature to speak of. It has afforded but poor soil for the growth of literary genius. And will it be gainsaid that American Jewry has been sterile of great personalities? Louis D. Brandeis is one of the very few towering personalities of American vintage. Perhaps Julius Rosenwald is another American Jew of stature. Louis Marshall is a significant personality, but he is a product of New York, developed in the hectic atmosphere of the Jewish metropolis. There are scores of Jewish millionaires, judges, politicians and other notables. They have no colour; no personal vividness; no historico-cultural significance.

II.

The bulk of American Jewry consists of the seething immigrant mass; hecti; spiritual; in the process of recreation. Its life is varied and full of struggles; the bitterness of futility; the restlessness of ambition; the shrewdness of experience; the gnawing pain of memories; the haunting of ghosts; the cockiness of success. In this maelstrom one may look for interesting and strong personalities; victims of the conditions, and leaders of their fellows. The life of the immigrant mass is a drama full of tragic moments; all through it runs the streak of inevitableness; the fatalism of doom. It is rootless, foundationless. It is futureless. In its very marrow there are teeming the germs of its destruction. And the atmosphere of tragedy is heightened by the stalking about of its great figures; strong personalities eaten away by the corrosive of ephemeralness and futility. They are the symbols of the hopelessness of their setting.

III.

Joseph Barondess was one of the tragic figures of the tragic play of Jewish life in New York. A flow of immigration surged into New York in the eighties; a mass of floating human debris. Barondess was one of the coterie of intellectuals who sought to impregnate this mass of humanity with a sustaining ideal. He saw in socialism the hope of humanity. He became a fiery preacher of the doctrines of Marx. The weary toilers in the dingy sweat-shops in New York, bartering away their life, for a pittance, needed a vision of happier conditions. Barondess and the group of Socialist leaders brought them the message of hope which they craved.

Jewish life moved on. As it integrated itself in the environment it became aware of new needs. It began to be conscious of its social and communal impoverishment and to reach out for the things it lacked. Barondess originally a Socialist was fully in sympathy with this process of expansion, and unlike many of his colleagues, realized the folly of hanging on to Socialism as the panacea for all ills, and the answer to all social questions. A considerable portion of the East Side masses graduated from the sweat-shops and push carts to more lucrative commercial callings. The economic advance brought about a change in their general attitude to life. Barondess did not negate the spiritual and social instincts of the new bourgeoisie. He sympathized with its yearnings for self-betterment and extended to it his help as freely as he did to the proletariat during its early days.

Thus we see Barondess constantly broadening his sphere of interest, keeping pace with the communal developments of the Jewish masses. When the East Side became conscious of its responsibilities in the sphere of philanthropy, Barondess was immediately on the scene to stimulate the new ambition. When Zionism made its appeal to the masses, Barondess instantly responded to the call. During the days of the Jewish Congress vogue, he was one of the heads of the movement.

Palestine: A Land of Contrasts

By EMIL BOGEN

The Arab boatmen plying between ship and shore at Jaffa are lithe, swarthy, husky and handsome, and particularly expert linguists, shouting lustily in Arabic, English, Hebrew, Yiddish, Russian and French. The quarantine system is suggestive of Ellis Island, with less distinction between first and third class. Everyone landing at Jaffa receives a vaccination against smallpox, no matter how recently he may have had one, or how strenuously he may object, and is ordered to report to the authorities later in the week for inspection of the result. Adjoining the little port is the Jewish city of Tel Aviv, resembling one of the suburbs of New York rather than an Oriental community in its bustling, modern commercial and recreational activities. The fine asphalt and macadam road from Jaffa to Jerusalem passes through a desolate rocky region, offering little hope of returns for the tremendous expenditures required for its reclamation. Jerusalem, for nearly a mile from the Jaffa Gate into the old city, is really quite modern, with well-paved streets, wide enough to allow automobiles to pass freely, new street signs, traffic policemen, fine stone buildings, with just enough of the Oriental flavour in the architecture to be distinctive, and a tinge of the desert in the occasional vacant spaces. But on the other side of Jaffa Gate . . . Old Jerusalem is . . . different.

There are many walled cities in the old world. The grand boulevards of Paris and Moscow mark the site of abandoned city walls. City gates, with fragments of the walls still standing, can be seen in most of the cities of Europe, and the Kremlin in Moscow and its counterparts in many other Russian cities, like the wall of the old Seraglio in Constantinople, are still formidable barriers. But Jerusalem is not merely a city surrounded by a wall, as are the others. It is literally built in a wall. The pueblos of New Mexico would make the closest comparison — tremendous stone apartment houses that they are—but they are too simple in construction. Old Jerusalem is complexly built with its caverns and grottos, lanes, alley passages, arcades, bazaars, balconies, stairways and walls. An automobile cannot pass into the old city. It must go around the city walls, but heavily laden little donkeys and sometimes even a camel move along the narrow aisles, often too narrow for persons to walk two abreast. And people! Well, New York subways are packed during the rush hour, but there the passengers are systematically disposed of. Here they are in every attitude, lying, sitting, lounging, leaning, and walking—all in the crowded street. And light. Well, there is enough to see your way about, when you get accustomed to the dimness, but that's all. The Arab women here wear veils—pretty things, those veils, but not the faces behind them. For the most part the Arab women seem to age very rapidly here. In many places the black veils cannot be seen for the darkness. But they must be a valuable protection against the flies, which abound here. And smells. They're not really so bad, when you get used to them, only tremendously composite and varied. No wonder the Orientals burn incense.

Is there anywhere a city with so large a hospital and dispensary attendance as Jerusalem? Besides the government hospitals and the half dozen Jewish hospitals, there are a number conducted by the missionaries. There is an impressively quiet, clean and efficient English atmosphere about the Christian Mission Society Hospital on Tancred Lane. Curiously enough, the signs in the wards are mainly in the Hebrew language, because most of the patients are Jewish. They keep a strictly kosher kitchen, where every effort is made to conform to the requirements of the most pious Jew who may apply for admission. The Rothschild Hospital, not far away, conducted by the Hadassah organization, is overcrowded and handicapped by consequent difficulties. The nurses' training school connected with it is quite thoroughly organized. It is certainly regrettable that, because of prejudices against post-mortem examinations among the Jewish population, there seems to be no possibility of establishing a modern medical school and really scientific study and treatment of the patients in Palestine.

The main building of the Hebrew University on the ridge of Mt. Scopus was wrecked in the earthquake, and the scientists there are working in cramped quarters in the parts that have already been restored, but when fully restored, there will be plenty of space for a great deal of work. There are few regular classes in this University, but considerable research work is being carried on. Dr. Kligler, the head of the Department of Hygiene and a recognized authority on malaria, is now busy investigating trachoma and sandfly fever, which are endemic in Palestine, while his assistant, Dr. Geiger, is studying problems of nutrition especially connected with salt deficiencies. Dr. Adler, the parasitologist, who has written extensively on the leishmania, is observing the behaviour of amoeba in cultures, and Dr. Wittenberg, an enthusiastic helminthologist, is tracing out the life history of parasites of man and beast never before recognized. Dr. Fodor, the bio-chemist, has the oldest and largest department in the University, and in connection with his studies on enzymes and the chemistry of proteins, is developing a new kind of malted whole wheat bread that may eliminate milling and increase both the caloric and the vitamine and mineral content of bread. The library of the University is scattered in a number of crowded buildings in Zichron Moshe, on the other side of Jerusalem, where are also located additional departments of the University.

From the bay of Haifa to the Jordan river, between the mountains of Galilee on the North and Mt. Carmel and the Bilboa mountains on the south, stretches the valley of Jezreel, the Emek Israel—the chief base of Zionist colonization since the war. About half of this land now belongs to Jews, mainly to the Jewish National Fund. It is rolling, dry, and rocky, resembling somewhat the plains of Arizona or New Mexico, except that there are many springs and during the winter there is abundant rainfall.

At Jeddah, a small kevutzah, stands a large building, erected for use as a textile factory, by a group of Jugo-Slavian Jews who invested all their savings in the building and machinery. But their funds proved insufficient to complete the equipment or secure materials to work with, and so it stands, useless and deserted, while its founders have lost all hope that they may ever regain anything of the costly investment it represents. The situation of a large project undertaken in excess of resources, though familiar to Jews of that part of the world is always tragic. Why is it allowed to develop?

Nahalal is one of the best examples of Zionist colonization. It is a moshav, or small holders' settlement, with a population of about a hundred families, each of which occupies a separate plot of ground and works it under conditions much like those of the settlers in Crimea. The village is laid out in a circular shape, with a central area for public buildings, schools, meeting places, etc., and a circular array of houses and yards, looking both efficient and artistic, certainly more appealing than the American cross-road village plan, or the two short parallel streets of the Crimean colonies. The houses are generally built of stone and are quite substantial, but paint is lacking, and curtains, flowers, trees, and the other niceties, so commonly seen in the German settlements and often in the Jewish colonies in Russia, are here rare. An extremely practical Girls' Agricultural Training School operates a segment of the colony.

Ain Harod, the largest kevutzah in Palestine, is a striking manifestation of radical social theory. Over four hundred persons live here an absolutely communal life, eating together in large community dining halls, sleeping together in common barracks, sharing alike in the good and ill fortunes of the community. Private property is practically unknown. Even the children are almost completely cared for from birth onward in the communal nurseries and children's division, the parents seeing them only for short visits after or before working hours. In fact, in Tel Josef, a kevutzah not far away, the children's division is an entirely separate establishment, located a number of miles away from the parent colony. A woman who had lived at Daganiah Aleph for more than a dozen years, pointing to the nursery building where her children were raised, expressed great satisfaction with this extremely communal mode of life, which left the mother free for outside work. And the children certainly appear well cared for.

Great work has been done in draining the swamps and marshes in the Jewish settlements, but since the adjacent Arab villages have done nothing of the kind, mosquitoes and malaria still abound. As for flies, no pretense is made at combatting them. The black swarms are generally accepted as an absolutely unpreventable and only mildly inconvenient phenomenon. The malaria situation is particularly distressing in the region north of Tiberias, and near the marsh-bordered upper Jordan. That the colonists who live in the numerous small settlements here are heroes is beyond doubt. Few indeed of the early settlers have survived, and the children here are pale and thin, with the enlarged spleens of chronic malaria. The farms, however, seem richer than those in the Emek.

In the extreme north lies Kfar Gileadi, the last resting place of the renowned Joseph Trumpeldor. The saga of this hero forms a new Jewish epic, which is rapidly assuming a legendary character. The lineage of Trumpeldor, his return to Judaism, his exploits in the Russo-Japanese war and his glorious departure from the army of the Czar form a mythological background for the romantic career he carved out for himself in the Holy Land. His actual contributions to the stabilization of Jewish life in the scattered colonies must have been great. But they are quite overshadowed by the dramatic tale of his death, fighting heroically against fearful odds in the defense of his newly-found fatherland and people against Arab hosts. The Maccabees and Bar Kochba are often recalled by way of comparison in the stories of this latest great Jewish military leader and martyr.

It is difficult to draw any valid conclusions about Palestine. "It is all a bluff," lamented one who had been there for more than five years. "Zionism seems a cruel Anti-Semitic plot to inflict the greatest amount of misery upon the Jews both here and in the Diaspora." "It's a joy to be here," said another. "If every other Jew in Palestine were to go away, I should still be happy to remain here, alone, on the land of my fathers, Eretz Yisroel."

More than sixty-five million dollars has been sunk in Zionist activities in Palestine, it is claimed, with less actual agricultural achievements than have been accomplished in Crimea in the past few years with but a small fraction of that amount. With emigration exceeding immigration, with the Arab birth-rate fifty per cent. greater than that of the Jews, and the Arabs already outnumbering the Jews six to one, the prospects for a Jewish majority in Palestine still seem remote. As Jewish power, and therefore Jewish demands increase, the conflict between Jews, Arabs and Christians sharpens. The Temple site, behind the praying wall, now the Mosque of Omar and a dangerous place for a Jew to frequent, especially on the Moslem holy days, is a constant source of danger.

Yet one cannot but be impressed by the sight of the settlers in the Judean colonies, with flourishing orchards and vineyards, and lithe children tilling the fields. It is moving to see the hundreds of girls and boys working the land in the training schools and agricultural settlements, or breaking stones on the roads. It is inspiring to behold the colonists in a malaria-ridden dump like Daganiah, persisting for years, in patriarchial communism, against all odds, or in Ain Harod, realizing in practice what is only talked about in Russia, the actual abolition of private property. Nor can one ignore the wonders of Tel Aviv, the city of joy built on air, or the University in Jerusalem and the Technicum in Haifa! It is often said that Palestine cannot succeed without a miracle. Can it be that such a miracle is actually taking place?—(Bnai Brith Magazine.)

It may be said that there was scarcely a movement or cause in Jewish life which Barondess did not sympathize with and serve.

Barondess was not a great man in the deeper sense of the term. He was a child of the transition period, and in his career and personality symbolized the poignant features of his period. American Jewish life has not yet produced any characteristic forms. The more thoroughly Americanized element with its more complete integration in the general life of the country has failed to evolve its version of life, and has not brought forth any personalities who might reflect its sense of permanency and at-homeness. The immigrant element carries within itself the doom of transitoriness. But its life is interesting; restless; energetic; tragic, and it has personalities who reflect its nervous tensity. Barondess was a rare man who understood his people; their virtues and failings and longings and ideals. He had tremendous oratorical powers, and was in many respects pre-eminently the tribune of the Jewish masses. Many of his colleagues, such as the Cahans, the Louis Millers, the Winchewskys, represented a certain faction in Jewish life. Barondess was a true representative of an entire generation of Jews in America during its stage of transition.

EDITOR, CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW:

In his editorial in the June 15 number of your magazine, A.B.B. takes issue with certain statements made by Rabbi Isserman in the latter's editorial (June 1) on Moses Mendelsohn.

A.B.B.'s mode of refutation is indeed curious. He appears to be a follower of the celebrated Alfonso da Liguori, according to whom certain types of equivocation were permissible because "then we do not deceive our neighbour, but allow him to deceive himself." In the hands of A.B.B., Rabbi Isserman's statements are given an accent and a bias which, I believe, were never intended. For instance, Rabbi Isserman wrote:

"Ours is the conviction that the wholesale defalcation from Judaism which took place in Germany in the latter part of the nineteenth century could have been minimized if there had been a vigorous reform movement, which could have reconciled for the intellectual Judaism and modern thought."

In re-stating this for his readers, A.B.B. ascribes to Rabbi Isserman the conviction that "Orthodoxy leads to the Church." To draw from the Rabbi's editorial such a general conclusion, devoid of the slightest qualification, of any reference to particular circumstances, is wilfully to lead astray one's readers.

It is equally surprising to find that A.B.B. who, very much in error, attempts to point out an illogicality in the Rabbi's editorial, should himself commit a gross error in reasoning. If, as Rabbi Isserman stated, the children of the orthodox Moses Mendelsohn left Judaism because they could not be inspired by the ritualistic demands of the old faith, it clearly follows, according to A.B.B., that since Moses Mendelsohn's parents were also orthodox, Moses too should have left Judaism. This is indeed a brilliant deduction! If A.B.B. will consult any beginner's book on logic he will observe that it is he, and not Rabbi Isserman, who has committed the fallacy of an undistributed middle.

Yours truly,

H.H.G.

It is many years since the Indians gave the name "Kawartha" to these lakes; yet to-day, vacationists find it the source of happy holidays in the many resorts scattered along the shores.

If you are an ardent fisherman, cast your line in the larger lakes for bass and maskinonge; in the smaller lakes speckled trout provide good sport.

At any of the many good summer hotels there is every facility for canoeing, motor-boating, bathing, tennis, golf and all the other out-of-door recreations.

Illustrated folders with full information and map of "Kawartha Lakes" will be gladly given you by any Canadian National Railway's Agent.

SOCIAL CENTRE IN NORTHERN WOODS

Deep in the heart of the rugged north country, hidden by pine-topped hills and thick virgin forests, lies a chain of sparkling blue lakes known as Lake of Bays. Almost unknown to the outside world until a few years ago, these Lakes have become the summer playground of vacationists and tourists.

The Lake of Bays district is large enough to enjoy seclusion and a holiday of backwoods life—if that is desired. If pleasure, gayety and joyous companionship is your holiday goal, there are large luxurious hotels—ultra-modern—where golf, tennis, bowling, swimming may occupy your time—where music and dancing makes a perfect end to a perfect day.

Any Canadian National Railway's Agent will gladly give you illustrated literature and full information on the Lake of Bays. Ask him for a list of hotels and cottages from which to make your selection.

LOST FROM CIVILIZATION IN THREE MILLION ACRES OF FOREST

In the heart of the Timagami Forest Reserve, miles away from civilization, the vacationist who loves the crisp, fresh air of out-of-doors, and the rugged beauty of nature, will find a holiday very much to his liking.

Whether you take along your own tent or make use of the accommodation at the excellent tourist camps, this north country does wonders in health building for you. Tired nerves relax, days of paddling harden muscles and give you a health coat of tan.

Exploring and fishing trips, under the care of an experienced guide, are big features of your holiday—he takes you to his particular fishing grounds—away on hikes and portages that bring to you the thrill of the old voyageur.

Ask any Canadian National Railway's Agent for full information and literature on holidaying in Timagami. He will be glad to assist you in every way.

Over the signatures of Melchett (Sir Alfred Mond), Lee K. Frankel, Felix M. Warburg and Oscar Wasserman, written June 18 in London, England, is an appeal to the Jewish world for one million pounds annually for five years for the re-establishment of Palestine. Among the conditions contained in this historic document is the "frank acceptance of the Jewish Agency" by the Zionists. It is brought out that the future and continuous development of the Homeland in Palestine must primarily depend on funds outside the Keren Hayesod which scarcely suffices to maintain existing services and to carry out schemes already in existence. In other words there will be no future growth in Palestine except by the co-operation of non-Zionists with Zionists. So from now on less and less is going to be heard about the Zionist Organization of America or of Canada or of the world. The Jewish Agency is the organization by which progress will be made in Palestine and the work is expected to go forward at least for the next five years, not to the sentimental quavers of impassioned schnorrers but to the prosaic language of sound business principles. It is expected that the Jews of the United States will raise three million dollars annually for five years and the rest of the budget will be made up by the Jews of Europe and other countries. The role of the British Government will be that of a guardian towards its ward and the government of Palestine will have a greater share of responsibility and co-operation with Jewish endeavours than hitherto.

You will remember that the Jewish Agency Commission was established last year following agreement between Dr. Chaim Weizmann, Zionist, and Louis Marshall, non-Zionist and president of the American Jewish Committee. The appeal of the Commissioners and their conclusions are based on the report of the Joint Palestine Survey Commission. This Commission was made up of experts in many fields, some of them United States Government specialists and others from Europe. The five-year programme is based on the findings of these men.

To adhere to the programme contemplated by the Commissioners through this survey would mean to re-organize thoroughly according to economic and business principles the work carried on in Palestine by the Zionists. It will be seen from the conditions as to immigration and settlement in Palestine that the country will be regarded much as any other country with more restrictions than hitherto observed in the selection of settlers, and with greater regard to actual facts and conditions.

As to immigration: There should always be a reasonable balance between the number of immigrants admitted and the economic needs of the country. Existing government regulations should be amended to enable the Jewish Agency to submit proposals for a labour schedule thrice yearly instead of twice, ascertaining the needs of the labour market. Immigrants should be selected in consonance with the needs of the country. The Jewish Agency should maintain an information bureau in communication with the Palestine Government and all centers from which immigrants with means might come to engage in private enterprise. They should be encouraged to come to Palestine. Repayments by immigrants of advances made to them should be enforced as speedily as the immigrants are able to repay.

As to agriculture: The Jewish Agency should urge the government to adopt measures to render certain lands available for settlement even before the completion of the cadastral survey of the country is completed. The Government has said it must wait for this before the apportionment of state lands to Jewish settlers. Until there is money with which to consolidate all existing colonies no new colonies should be established. A systematic policy of afforestation should be considered by the Palestine Government. The present system of taxation should be modified so that it will not be based on the yield of the land but on the unimproved value of the property. New agricultural enterprises should be exempt from taxation for five years as in other parts of the world where agricultural colonization is encouraged. Efforts should be made to secure settlers with means as well as those merely qualified for agricultural work. Holdings should be improved and prepared previous to settlement; land drained, water supplied, roads constructed, soil prepared, etc., so that the holding will provide a living from the beginning.

Competent business management is to characterize the colonization department under the Jewish Agency. The further establishment of communal settlements (Kvuzoth) is undesirable but those under way should be completed. Further establishment of hill colonies should be abandoned. The Jewish Agency should secure a land reserve where settlers can become actual owners of the land. Formal written contracts should be made between the Agency and individual settlers, and settlers who fail to meet requirements as to fair repayments in installments should be replaced by others. Investigation of the use of artificial fertilizers is urged as a means to making more land cultivable and increasing possibilities for settlement of Jews. The policy of not employing outside labour of any kind as practiced by the Zionists should be abandoned since it often makes harvest of crops impossible. Many other details of co-operative purchase of materials, etc., are mentioned besides these details of management.

As to industry: There is room in Palestine for industrial development. A bureau of commercial and tourist information should be established in New York and London. The question of customs agreements and tariffs should be taken up by a Tariff Board. Hotel facilities should be provided. A council should be formed of representatives of employers and workers in industry and agriculture to handle matters tending to labour disputes. Co-operative organizations of producers and consumers should be encouraged if founded on sound business principles, not according to doctrinaire theories.

Above is the gist of the Jewish Agency Commission report, in parts verbatim. The men who signed it, pledged their personal endeavours toward the success of the policy outlined. Support of this policy providing for new development in Palestine, the acquisition of new territory and the initiation of broader schemes, these men urge upon the whole Jewish Community of the World as its duty and its obligation.

AUSTRIAN JEWS LOSE IN COURT TRIAL

A famous case that has been before the Vienna courts for some time was concluded recently with a verdict against the defendants, Dr. Stricker and Dr. Plaschkes. Count Czernin, the former State Secretary for Foreign Affairs of the Austro-Hungarian Empire, had made an uncomplimentary reference to Jewish army contractors in a book which he published on his travels in South Africa. He speaks of the Jews as "money grubbers" and "ugly sunfish." Mr Stricker, the publisher of a German weekly, Die Neue Zeit," with a Zionist tendency, made the book of Count Czernin the subject for an attack in his paper and for several issues spoke in insulting terms of the former minister. Considering the charges against him as defamatory and libelous, Count Czernin brought suits against Robert Stricker and Dr. Plaschkes, an attorney, who are responsible for the Zionist paper.

The Jews of Austria are apparently divided in their opinion on this matter and they do not all sympathize with the defendants in this case. Count Czernin was known as a philo-Semite and has proved his friendship for the Jews on several occasions during his administration. He was the only member of the cabinet who championed the interests of the Jews during the peace negotiations with Rumania and, after the Rumanian declaration of war against Austria, he delayed his departure from the territory for eight days in order to save two Jews who were arrested as spies. After the revolution, he entrusted his entire fortune and that of his relatives to a jewish merchant, who lost his entire property through unsuccessful speculations. It was then that Czernin, embittered and disappointed, left for South Africa and in his diaries he spoke bitterly of Jewish war profiteers for which he later made an apology. This, however, was not sufficient and Dr. Plaschkes and Mr Stricker began a series of articles in which the Count's character is attacked. The trial disclosed that the defendants could not substantiate their charges and a verdict was given declaring them guilty of libel and making them pay a nominal fee as a fine. After the verdict was rendered, Dr. Plaschkes was attacked by a monarchist officer in court. The officer was arrested.

The arrest of Bela Kun in Vienna recently has caused much concern to the Jews as well as to the general population in Austria. The leader of the Red Terror in Hungary about nine years ago was arrested in Austria in 1919, immediately after his brief attempt to establish Bolshevism in Hungary failed. The Austrian Government then permitted him to proceed to Russia, in spite of the demands made by Hungary for his extradition, on condition that he never comes back to Austria without a special permit. A few weeks ago, he was discovered in Vienna, as a druggist, and the police found in his store a number of documents which indicate that he was engaged in giving aid to the Hungarian Communists. Hungary again demands his extradition on the ground of murder, grand larceny and forgery, but the Austrian police are holding him on the charge of entering the land without permission and for conducting propaganda against the local government. The question involved is of international importance, since Kun is now a Russian citizen, although a native of Transylvania, and Hungary has a good legal claim for his extradition. There is no doubt that should he be delivered to the Hungarian Government he will be given the death penalty.

It is well known that Bela Kun's activities in Hungary have indirectly brought about the repressive measures against Jews in that country. The White Terror, which followed closely upon the debacle of the Kun regime, was responsible for many acts of terror against Jews. The numerous clauses in Hungary can be traced to the feeling of animosity aroused by the Red Terror against all Jews, although many Hungarian Jews were as opposed to the Communists as some of the most patriotic Magyars. The present arrest of Bela Kun recalled to the Hungarians the brief period of terror when thousands of people were murdered and much property destroyed. Bolshevism is as much dreaded to-day there as it was nine years ago and the desire to revenge themselves on the man responsible for the situation is very intense.

Professor Willstatter, the famous authority on Chemistry, who resigned from the Munich University on account of the Anti-Semitic regime there, has received the Degree of Doctor Honoris Causa at the Zurich Technical College. Professor Willstatter holds a similar honour from the Manchester University.

Mischa Levitzki, the pianist, returned from Europe for a brief visit home. His first European tour included nearly fifty appearances, embracing England, Germany, and Italy.

"We offer great 'selectivity'"

This new radio term "selectivity" embodies one of the most pleasing features of this laundry. Five different ways of doing such an apparently simple thing as family wash are offered our customers. This enables housewives to select as much or as little help as they feel they need and pay accordingly. Our rates, of course, as anyone will tell you, are extremely low—much less, in fact, than home methods. Let us tell you more in detail. Phone

He bequeathed the stock to his daughters, Rosetta Zeman and Charlotte Brody; furniture and personal effects to his widow. From the personal estate, trust fund of $5,000 is to be created to meet emergencies, and from the income of the estate, a sufficient sum is to be paid the Aged Women's Home to maintain his aunt, Sophia Wurzel. Cohen and Lawrence Kert, solicitor, "preference to be given to charitable work relative to boys' work, and in the assisting of Jewish boys' welfare work and in assisting Jewish boys by way of loans, with or without interest, or gifts for taking up Jewish boys' welfare work. Mrs. Cohen is not to give more than $200 a year to charity from her income in any one year, nor to make a loan in excess of $500 to any of the children in any year. So much of the income as is not needed for her maintenance is to be divided among the children each year. On the death of Mrs. Cohen, one-tenth of the estate is to be formed into a trust fund for charitable work along the same lines as that to which part of the income is to be devoted, and to be administered by his son, Mark, and Lawrence Kert, and a third to be chosen by them. LEAGUE GAMES

In the Jewish Community League games of last week, the game between Bnai Brith and Herzls on Monday night was rained out besides the game between Mount Sinai and Judaean Benevolent. In the games on Tuesday night, Leonards were leading by a large score against U.L.P.S. when the umpire awarded the game to Leonards. In the late game, Y.M.H.A. defeated Sunnysides in a close game, but the game was thrown out by reason of Y.M.H.A. using ineligible players. On Wednesday night, Hasmonians defeated S.A.M. 5 to nil, with Wahl the Hasmonian pitcher allowing only one hit. Miller was the big hitter with two home runs. In the second game, Tuex took on the strong Adanacs and lost out, 8 to 6, the Tuex team playing poor ball behind the excellent twirling of Sniderman who struck out eleven. The feature game of the year has been arranged for next Wednesday night, when the Weintraubs, who played Bnai Brith a 12-inning game before the largest crowd to ever see a distinctly Jewish sporting event in this city, return for another game against Bnai Brith. All Jewish sport lovers are urged to attend as the entire proceeds will go to the Bnai Brith camp. Manager Lipson of Bnai Brith wishes the following players who will play against the Weintraubs to be on hand before 7 o'clock: J. Rumac (B.B.); H. Chaplin (B.B.); M. Cohen (B.B.); A. Perlstone (B.B.); G. Altman (B.B.); Track (Herzls); H. Sniderman (Tuex); W. Sniderman (Leonards); Max Sniderman (Leonards), and Miller (Hasmonians). The games of next Monday night, July 2, have been called off on account of the holiday.
